Conclusions and Recommendations

The Commission has concluded that the alleged human rights violations and abuses by the Philippine National Police (PNP) and the Philippine Army (PA) against the victims and their families are grave and serious.

The Commission has also concluded that the PNP and the PA have failed to provide adequate and timely assistance and support to the victims and their families, and that the victims and their families have suffered significant physical, psychological, and economic harm.

In light of the above, the Commission recommends that the PNP and the PA should be held accountable for the alleged human rights violations and abuses, and that the victims and their families should be provided with adequate and timely assistance and support, including medical, psychological, and economic aid.

The Commission also recommends that the PNP and the PA should be required to provide a full and complete report on the alleged human rights violations and abuses, and that the victims and their families should be provided with a full and complete report on the progress of the investigation and the implementation of the recommendations.

The Commission further recommends that the PNP and the PA should be required to provide a full and complete report on the alleged human rights violations and abuses, and that the victims and their families should be provided with a full and complete report on the progress of the investigation and the implementation of the recommendations.
